

Basic policy for recruitment of permanent researchers through public advertisement

July 2020

As a comprehensive research institute of science and technology for disaster risk reduction, National Research Institute for Earth Science and Disaster Resilience (NIED) will recruit promising researchers to flexibly respond to changes surrounding disaster risk reduction, strengthen national resilience and contribute to the creation of a sustainable society. With the applicants, we will produce excellent research outcomes in accordance with the national policy and enhance the research base that tackles with transdisciplinary science and social collaboration.

The applicants, as our permanent research staff, are expected to lead our important research programs/projects and to be able to manage NIED in the future. We will accept applications not only domestically but also internationally in accordance with the guidelines set by NIED and select candidates through a fair screening process with the help from external experts.

National Research Institute for
Earth Science and Disaster Resilience